But other kids held garbage bags. They were picking up trash. Ravi stopped his bike. One of the kids was Anita, a girl from his school. She waved at Ravi. "We're cleaning up the park today," she said. "Want to help?" "No, thanks," Ravi said.

Today was Saturday, a day off. He came to the park to have fun, not to work! Ravi rode his bike around the path. He passed the swings and the slide. He passed the small pond. As he rode, he saw things he never noticed before. There was lots of garbage on the ground. He saw old bottles. He saw old food wrappers. It was pretty gross. Ravi rode back to Anita. He got off his bike. "I'll help," he said. Anita smiled. "Here," she said.

She gave him a bag. Ravi and the kids cleaned for about an hour. When they were done, the park looked great. Ravi rode his bike around the path again. There were no old bottles. There were no old food wrappers. Ravi smiled. Now the park was better than ever.

Storms

Tropical storms are huge areas of weather disturbances that develop in the oceans of the world. They gather heat and energy from the warm ocean water, or currents, and can grow to sizes of up to 600 miles across and generate swirling winds with speeds of 75 to 200 miles per hour! Although all large tropical storms are more or less the same, they are called by different names depending on their location. In the Atlantic and the Northeast Pacific oceans (for example, near the United States), they are called "hurricanes".

However, for the same type of disturbance in the Northwest Pacific Ocean (for example, near Japan, which is regularly hit by them every year), the term "typhoon" is used, while those that occur in the South Pacific and Indian Ocean are known as "cyclones".

In the United States, for example, the first hurricane name starts with the letter 'A', like Alexander, and the names move through the alphabet as more hurricanes appear.

Tropical storm clouds move in a circle around a point called the eye, which is the centre of the storm. When a large tropical storm comes ashore, it brings with it heavy rains and powerful winds that can damage, or even destroy, buildings, cars and trees. However, the most devastating element of a large tropical storm is the storm surge. These are large waves that are generated by the storm and can cause massive flooding and are the main reason people in coastal cities are ordered to evacuate and move to higher ground when a large storm approaches. Scientists who study the weather are called meteorologists. In the United States, hurricane season begins on 1 June and lasts until 30 November. In terms of frequency and damage caused, 2005 was a record year for hurricanes.

Which of these statements is TRUE?

A. Storm surges are not as destructive as heavy rains and powerful winds.
B. Hurricanes hit the coast of Japan every year.
C. In 2005, the USA was hit by more hurricanes and suffered more damage than in any other year.
D. Scientists who study the weather are called archaeologists.
